

I strongly object to the general use of cell phones on flights unless "phone booths" are provided so that we passengers are not forced to listen to other peoples' chatter about their personal and business concerns. I once spent a miserable flight listening to a nearby passenger constantly shuffling a deck of rigid playing cards, and that was bad enough. With the cramped quarters on most planes today, flying is enough of an ordeal without the addition of intrusive cell phone calls.